Ski Touring in Georgia

The little Caucasus

The Little Caucasus:

This incredible mountain range stretches from east to west, south of the Greater Caucasus and to the edge of the Armenian plateau. The borders of Georgia, Armenia and Azerbaijan cross this chain of the Lesser Caucasus.

The Bakuriani ski resort is located 180 km west from the capital, in the mountains of the Lesser Caucasus, at the border with Armenia. With a slope of more than 1,000 metres, skiing is between 1,640 and 2,700 metres. It's a ski resort with very modern infrastructures that offers many possibilities for off-piste skiing as well as cross-country skiing with easy access along the ridges.

The Aboul Samsari massif, located near the city of Akhalkalaki, is dominated by Didi Abuli, which rises to an altitude of 3,300 meters. A little further north is the imposing more than a second volcano that dominates the massif. It is Didi Samsari, the second highest peak in the small Caucasus.

Ski Touring in Georgia

The little Caucasus

This stay goes beyond the traditional ski trip; on the one hand it allows you to immerse yourself in a country and on the other to discover a rare and wild massif.

The program is divided in two parts; first we will begin this trip with the ski resort of Bukariani (the only ski resort in the south of the country).

A single slope will allow you to reach the highest point of Bakuriani, the rest is a huge off-piste area (1050 meters of unevenness). There are many possibilities for ski touring from here and around the resort.

After a soft acclimatization and a good contact with the terrain, we will arrive at the city of Akhalkalaki, which are the gates of the massif of Aboul Samsari to ski in the volcanoes that dominate this city.

Didi Abuli, which culminates at 3300m, is the highest trans-Caucasian peak in Georgia. Its slopes seem to be made for skiing in all of them.
